“Quo Vadis Italia?”

New limits, new parameters – Investing in Real Estate in a disrupted market

Making a real estate investment decision has never been affected by as many uncertainties as it is now. Rising interest rates, inflation, increasing construction costs, supply chain interruptions, political tensions caused by Russia’s invasion of Ukraine and the changing geo-political landscape, climate change and the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic – the list of challenges is growing. And in Italy, national elections may further change the investment environment for real estate. DLA Piper’s Quo Vadis Italy conference will offer a unique view on how international and national investors, asset managers and developers see the current investment climate, including how the change in government will affect the Italian real estate market.
